Fan project for corona crisis - #StayHome The Very End dancing with fans in new #CoronaManiac music video

With the hashtag #CoronaManiac, The Very End called on their fans to send in self-made clips for the band's new music video. The finished video is now available on YouTube.

Bare skin, burning guitars, and lots of toilet paper - the creativity of metal heads seems to have not been damaged by several weeks of self-isolation. "There was so much wonderfully moronic stuff, great! I think some people were thankful to be able to let it all hang out in the current bizarre situation", explains singer Björn Gooßes.

The #StayHome project was a spontaneous idea

A spontaneous idea in times of Corona led to the call for community action at the beginning of April. Those who wanted to participate could go off to the 80s Flashdance hit "Maniac", which was covered by The Very End, and film themselves. In only two weeks numerous submissions landed in the band's mailbox. The agency CHUNDERKSEN was responsible for the realization of the video. Co-owner Jan Derksen has already worked in 2011 as production manager for The Very End's music video for "A Hole In The Sun".

Motorjesus, Bonded and many more surprising guest appearances

Friends of the band and scene stars like Waldemar Sorytcha, producer of the album Mercy & Misery, on which the song "Maniac" was released as a bonus track, are also part of the band. Besides working for The Very End, the Grip Inc. guitarist and mastermind is also responsible for productions of bands like Tiamat, Lacuna Coil, or Samael. Christoph Birx from Motorjesus, as well as Bonded singer Ingo Bajonczak and bassist Marc Hauschild and many more, are also in the video.

"We just wanted to do something together in this distance-strained time. Since the work on our new album is delayed by the Corona crisis anyway, we can kill the time in a quite cool way", adds René Bogdanski.
